

Information taken from https://www.cornwalls.co.uk/myths-legends/king_arthur.htm

Trevethy Quoit, on Bodmin Moor, is also known as King Arthur's Quoit. This is one of the most impressive burial chambers in Cornwall, standing at more than 15 feet high. It actually dates from the Bronze Age period, so is unlikely to have any real connection with Arthur. However, King Arthur's Hall and Arthur's Bed are other landmarks on the moor.

Perhaps one of the more interesting places connected with Arthurian legends is the quiet Dozmary Pool, a natural lake which has been a centre of occupation since the Stone Age. This is where the legendary sword, Excalibur, was thrown by Sir Bedivere after the Battle of Camlann and Arthur's death. Folklore claims that this is a bottomless pool, the residence of the Lady of the Lake. It was here that the younger Arthur rowed out to claim the mighty Excalibur. Dozmary Pool can be found close to Jamaica Inn at Bolventor.